

Our Philosophy

Red Devil Training can provide your department with very cost-effective training. We don't charge by the student (though some classes have lab fees based on the number of students). So the overall cost of the training per student is usually a lot lower than sending a student to a "fire school."

For example, an 8-hour RIT class at a fire school can cost $80 per student. If you send 20 firefighters, the total for your department would be $1600. Plus your personnel would not be around for taking calls.

Save Money!

Red Devil Training's approximate cost* (including a v-erage travel expenses) would be $470. That averages out to $23.50 per student (for 20 students). That is an $1100 savings. Even with a lab fee (as an example) of $10, you still save $900. Plus Red Devil Training will do the training in your station or local meeting area, leaving your personnel available for calls. And, yes, Red Devil Training will "pause" class during calls so your personnel don't miss a thing. Also, we "advertise" each class as "X" amount of hours. If the class takes a little longer, that's OK with us—there are no extra charges or fees for running over. And we never quit based on the clock.

Red Devil Training believes in the phenomenon of what we call "Organizational Implosion." This self-destructive, crippling organizational behavior is the simple practice of not looking outside at what the rest of the world is doing in your field. The longer this practice continues the more cut-off the organization becomes from the rest of their field.

In the fire service, this relates to a "we'll do it our way" mentality. Basically, the less information that is brought in from the outside world, the more isolated a fire department becomes from the rest of the fire service. Finally, the organization collapses due to insufficient information being shared from the outside. "Collapse" can directly translate into an injury or death in the fire service.

Red Devil Training breaks that "Organizational Implosion" of training and pours on the knowledge—at a speed that everyone in the department can be comfortable with. Red Devil Training can't and won't replace your training division, but we can supplement and complement it.

About RDT

Red Devil Training knows how hard it can be to keep your personnel up-to-date and well-trained. That's why we offer our services at a huge savings over alternative trainings. We think every firefighter deserves the best information available. Having that information department-wide can save time, money, energy and most importantly: LIVES.

Red Devil Training's Founder, Mike Bucy, has been in emergency services since 1987, most of the time associated with multiple agencies. Mike has been an active instructor since 1993 and continues to attend national seminars on the fire service and leadership/management. Mike is an Assistant Chief with the City of Portage Fire Department and he is retired from Union Fire-Rescue after 15 years of volunteer service—the last being five very successful years as Fire Chief.

Consulting goes hand-in-hand with training: They are basically the same thing in slightly different wrappers. Red Devil Training has its roots in Emergency Media Services, a consulting and photography firm that continues to operate today.

Red Devil Training is focused on the little department. While we can do any sized department, the smaller departments have the hardest time getting their members to attend outside classes. Red Devil Training brings those outside, quality classes to your department, saving your department time and money.
